

FOXWOOD VILLAGE BOOK CLUB (continued)

Arab's Wife by S.I. Naslund - Naslund has a gift for prose, but I feel more as an essayist than novelist. The saga of Una, for me ran on too long. The mixing of fact and fiction melded well in some instances, but in others were too far fetched.

Little Bee by Chrs Cleave - Cleave is a wonderful story teller. The horrible atrocities on which this book was based were made readable and enjoyable through Cleave's peppering it with his wry humor. Quite a feat.

Angela's Ashes by Frank McCourt Frank McCourt is gone and the Lanes are gone. but his story is still with us. I enjoyed reading it for the second time, as much as I did the first time I read it. - Betty

Angela's Ashes by Frank McCourt is a memoir of his childhood growing up in Ireland during the depression. While the story can be heart wrenching due to misgivings of as alcoholic father and the profound poverty that they existed in, it also rang true to the lilt of Irish humor whereby acceptance and making the most out of a bad situation is the heart of the story. Religion and education was a big part of his life. McCourt really demonstrates the strength of the human spirit and keeps you wanting to find out how it all will end. As an adult, McCourt comes back to America, becomes an English teacher and college adjunct professor and ultimately a successful author. - Judy

WHO AM I ???

Graduated Seaford High School.

Attended FIT in New York City.

Worked for the New York Telephone Company.

Married & has 3 grown children & 5 grandchildren

Enjoys fishing, bowling, crafts & ceramics

This is a high school picture of one of the residents of Foxwood Village. Send in your own high school picture and see if anyone can guess who you are!